Then there will be a cry to adopt measures to prevent a repetition of the mishap. Such accidents could be entirely avoided if the public would adopt the plan which is now a law in the majority of cities in Florida; to cross the streets at square angles instead of slicing off a few steps as has been the custom since long before automobiles were known. Under the new plan an accident is almost an impossibility-if the driver gives the proper signals; and should there be an isolated case of damage the fault can be quickly and accurately determined Usually it will be found that the driver of the car is wholly at fault.
